

“A Portrait Artist

Through the years he had painted
people as he saw them.
Patrons murmured,
“Somber tones,” “Shadows, deep.”
He wondered,
but painted still.

Musing in his studio,
he cried out with a gasp.
Reflected in a silvered glass,
Himself he had painted,
his pain,
his sorrows dark.